SECTION 5: Intake test (Part A)

To be completed in English

Passage A

Title: *What makes multiculturalism great is mutual respect

Every year millions of Australians celebrate Australia Day, the day of the founding of the nation, on 26 January, 1788. Among the most enthusiastic participants in the celebrations are the thousands of Australia's newest citizens who have settled successfully into Australian society.

There is a fashionable idea circulating in the international community that declares multiculturalism dead, or to blame it for crime and terrorism. However, multiculturalism has achieved great success in Australia and Australians remain friendly and welcoming towards new migrants.

Multiculturalism's main goal is to encourage all members of society to fulfil their potential, by supporting migrants arriving in Australia to overcome whatever obstacles they face as they adjust to a new country and society, thereby empowering them to achieve their goals and aspire to success.

Australia's post-war immigration policy was initially driven by economic imperatives, but governments since 1973 have recognised the benefits of inviting immigrant populations to fully participate in society. In doing so, successive governments have actively promoted the importance of respect for the cultures and customs that migrants bring with them.

The Australian ideal of multiculturalism is underpinned by respect for traditional Australian values. Migrants who arrive in Australia are invited to continue to celebrate their cultures within a broader culture of democratic freedom. If there are any inconsistencies between values in migrant cultures and individual freedoms under the rule of law, then the Australian values take precedence. All major political parties in Australia do not support cultural practices and ideas inconsistent with values of democracy, justice, equality and tolerance.

Exercise 1

“What do you think are the most important things in creating a cohesive and peaceful society, especially where there are many ethnic communities from diverse backgrounds?”

SECTION 6: Intake test (Part B)

To be completed in LOTE (Language Other Than English)

Part 1

Please translate the following passage into your language

What is Mental Health?

Good mental health is a vital part of overall good health and wellbeing. It is just as important to maintain good mental health as it is to maintain good physical health.

“Mental illness” is a general term that refers to a group of illnesses affecting the mind, in the same way that physical illness refers to a group of illnesses affecting the body.

Episodes of a mental illness can come and go in periods throughout people’s lives. Some people experience their illness only once and then fully recover. Not only do people with mental illnesses and their families have to cope with an illness that can radically alter their lives, they often experience rejection and discrimination in the community and at work.

If you require immediate help please contact either Lifeline or Kids Help. Both these services can help you or, if necessary, refer you on to appropriate mental health support networks.
